

More than a family history, A Profitable End is a testimony to the resilience and devotion of the early believers in Iran, offering future generations a standard of faith, service, and sacrifice. It is an invaluable resource for researchers, youth, and lovers of Bahá'í history alike.

It is reproduced here with the kind permission of the author and the family of 'Abdu'l-Vahháb Zabihi who have expressed a sincere wish to make this important historical work accessible to seekers, scholars, and members of the global Bahá'í community.

Originally the book was published in Persian with the title of Aghebat bekheir ("Good Ending"). This name is about the father of Mr. Zabihi's wife, Mr. Ali Akbar, who went to the Holy Land for pilgrimage. One day 'Abdu'l-Baha invited him to go somewhere in His carriage. He was seated between 'Abdu'l-Baha and the youthful Shoghi Effendi. 'Abdu'l-Baha told him; "Ali Akbar - you have had several martyrs in your family. What more do you want?" In reply Ali Akbar said, "I want to be Aghebat Bekheir" (to have a good ending). Later on 'Abdu'l-Baha took off his own Aba (Robe) and put it on Ali Akbar's shoulders and said; "this also we give you!"

The English translation was printed in China with the title A Profitable End.
