{title} The Buddha--Karita or Live of Buddha by Asvaghosha,

Indian poet of the early second century after Christ. Sanskrit text, edited from a Devanagari and two Nepalese manuscripts with variant readings, a preface, notes and in index of names.

{editorial.notes}

Annotations, remarks etc. by the editor of the transliteration are enclosed in square brackets.

Annotations by the editor(s) of the edition which served as source of the transliteration (e.g. conjectures, markers for lacunae etc.) which are part of the printed edition are enclosed in pointed parentheses.

{\editorial.notes}

{colophons}

Colophons which are part of the printed edition are enclosed by double square brackets.

{\colophons}

{variae.lectiones}

{variants}

The beginning of the passage for which a variant exists is marked by opening parenthesis. In deciding about the extension of the text thus marked, the changes generated for the text format had to be taken into consideration. This meant that occasionally words which are identical in the base text and in the variant are included in the parentheses, since in the text format (sa.mhita) the beginning of a variant could not be printed if that word is joined to the preceding word in vowel sandhi. Thus we write "... (mah-a+-atm-a Xmah-a+puru.sa.h) ...", even though the "mah-a+" is identical in both versions.

The beginning of the variant is marked by a siglum, viz. by a single capital letter (capital letters are used exclusively for that purpose in the transliteration). Several sigla are separated by a comma (no blank) -- which does not occur in this file of course. There is no blank between the siglum and the variant. If there are several variants for the same passage of the base text, they are listed sequentially. The variant (or the last variant if there is more than one) is closed by the closing parenthesis. The blank before the next word is considered to belong to the variant and is put inside the parentheses. The continuation of the base text follows without intermediate blank.

Schematic pattern:

(... A...)...

(... A,B...)...

(... A... B...)...

{\variants}

{interpolations}

Interpolations are treated as "variants without base text", i.e. siglum follows immediately upon the opening parenthesis. The siglum is repeated before the closing parenthesis which marks the end of the interpolation. This allows for the input of variants within interpolations which are attested in more than one source.

Long interpolations may be entered as a sequence of separate interpolations (e..g. verse by verse). Interpolated lines are (may be) marked by "X" at the beginning of the line (which is meant to mark "star"--passages as e..g. in the critical edition of the MBh).

{\interpolations}

{omissions}

Passages from the base text which are omitted in any of the variant texts are marked by double parentheses plus siglum enclosing the omitted passage (which may also be individual words).

Schematic patterns:

((S... S))

... ((S... S))...

{\omissions}

{\variae.lectiones}

{\analysis}

{reference.system}

The full reference (chapter and verse) is given at the end of the verse to which it refers. (While transliterating the full reference needs to be typed only for the first verse of each chapter.) The reference consists of two figures separated by a (single) dot. The first number refers to the chapter, the second number refers to the verse--number within the chapter.

The beginning of references is marked by double exclamation mark (i.e. da.n.da) and the end is marked by a single exclamation mark. Always after a reference a new line begins.
